$1.50 Per Year In Advance

HUSTLERS GET IN THIS RACE NOW!

EVERY WORKER A WINNER;
PAY CHECK EVERY SAT. NIGHT
SOME ONE GET'S $100 A WEEK

Many complimentary remarks are being heard on all sides with reference to the progressiveness and liberality of the Semmler Publications, including the Mokena News-Bulletin, the Tinley Park Times and the Orland Park Herald, in offering a brand new 1936 Ford V-8 tudor sedan or a 1936 Chevrolet town sedan and many other elegant awards, in keeping with the broad and liberal lines along which this Weekly Pay-check subscription drive has been drawn. The drive opened Monday and comes to a close Saturday, July 11—just six short weeks.

The undertaking, while colossal in a way, has met with instant favor in the eyes of the newspaper reading public, and if advance interest manifested may be taken as a criterion, the venture is already an assured success. Never before in this community has there been a circulation drive of such magnitude; where the time was so short and the conditions so easy and so liberal. Never before has there been a subscription drive where all the workers were given a pay check every Saturday for the work accomplished during the week. AND THE PAY CHECK WILL BE JUST AS LARGE AS THE WORKERS WANT TO MAKE IT.

1936 CAR BIG FEATURE
One feature alone is enough to make it the most talked of event in this section in recent years. That feature is the offer to award a brand new 1936 automobile to the worker securing the greatest number of votes. Besides the automobile a liberal cash prize and numerous bonus checks will be awarded to the six highest in the race, and those who fail to finish in the prize list will be awarded a cash commission of 20 per cent and this commission will be paid every worker every Saturday. YOU CAN'T LOSE IN THIS RACE.

OBJECT OF PAY CHECK CAMPAIGN
The object of this Weekly Pay-check campaign is, of course, to secure new and renewal subscriptions to the Semmler Publications including the Mokena News-Bulletin, the Tinley Park Times and the Orland Park Herald. And in order to attain this end quickly and advantageously, this liberal "Weekly Pay-check" campaign has been inaugurated—a campaign in which we are giving to those who take part a goodly portion of our income.

This campaign is open to all and is just starting. All that is necessary to become a participant and get your share of the fine prizes we are offering is to clip the nomination blank appearing elsewhere in this issue, fill in your name or the name and address of some friend for whom you wish to work and mail or deliver to the Weekly Payroll Department, Mokena News-Bulletin, Mokena, Illinois and we will see that you are taken care of. Don't forget that the collection of back subscriptions and renewals are just as valuable in the vote count as new subscribers.

PARADE CLIMAX TO WILL CO., CENTENNIAL

Will County's big centennial celebration climaxed in a blaze of glory Thursday afternoon when a huge parade in which floats from Joliet, and many parts of the county was held in Joliet. About seventy five floats were in the line of march depicting the steady growth of the county thruout the past 100 years.

Local floats in which interest centered were those of New Lenox and Frankfort townships. The New Lenox float was a replica of the first post office in Will County which was located in the "Uncle Billy" Gougar cabin in New Lenox township at what is now known as Gougar's crossing west of the village of New Lenox. Wm. J. Gougar, a direct descendant of the first New Lenox postmaster, sat in the post-office float.

New Lenox township had another entry by way of a truck load of the belles of 1860 of that township.

Frankfort township had a rather unique entry by way of an old time corn husking bee, replete with corn stalks, red ears of corn, square dances danced to old time accordion music. The caller, fiddlers and dancers were from Mokena and Frankfort. The float was very prettily decorated.

The school bands of New Lenox and Frankfort in their new uniforms, marched in the parade.

Wednesday night a centennial banquet was held at the Elks club in Joliet. Former Governor Joe Pfeiffer of Bloomington, who served as governor from 1889 to 1893, and who is now 96 years old was the chief speaker. He gave a very convincing and masterly discourse on the forefathers of America and showed that the early settlers brought the school and the church to this section soon after they located their homes. He pointed out that the pioneers did not bring vice, and corruption to the new country, but instead brought high ideals and a form of government which no other nation has. He said it is the duty of this generation to hand down this priceless legacy to future posterity.

Dr. Gordon of Rockford, a prominent minister, also stressed the obligation which is ours to uphold the institutions created by the founders of this nation. It was shown that the pen is mightier than the sword inasmuch as the famous warriors of the world have left no legacy that is of any benefit to humanity, but those men who drew up the Magna Charta of Europe and of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, have written documents which have and are effecting the lives of millions of people. That the constitution of the United States must be kept inviolate, was stressed by both speakers. Senator R. J. Barr served as toastmaster.

New Lenox township had a very interesting exhibition of old time relics on display at the Boston Store in Joliet.

The editor had a number of old time relics from his family in the display at the Oestereich Auto Top shop on Clinton St. Among them were an old time what not and a pair of leather boots made by the editor's father, John Semmler forty years ago at the time he was conducting a shoe shop in New Lenox.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—A week or ten days ago, the name of Frank O. Lowden was scarcely whispered around where "Draft Lowden" politicians foregathered. They talked about the forthcoming Republican National convention and they mentioned Governor Landon of Kansas; Col. Frank Knox of Illinois, Sen. Arthur Vandenberg of Michigan, and others, but never was the name of Lowden mentioned.

In the short space of a fortnight, there has come first a whisper of the name of Lowden, then a mention of him as a possible Republican nominee and finally a full voice that approximates a "draft Lowden" movement.

A few weeks ago I reported to you in these columns that the prospects were very good for the Republican National convention to turn to a dark horse. There was no name at that time upon which anyone could pin a prediction but there were circumstances, undercurrent in character, that seemed to point the way to the nomination of a man not then in the forefront of political prognostications.

Of course, with the Republican convention delegates pledged and unpledged here, there, and everywhere, it is possible for almost anything to happen but my information is that the leaders desire most of all to avoid a bitter battle. They wish to avoid the very thing which New Deal political strategists have been seeking to foment. The final ballot will tell the story, of course, but it does appear at this time that the Republican leadership may display some good horse sense and seek to accomplish a nomination without splitting their party wide open.

This "draft Lowden" movement has come on with almost startling suddenness as I have indicated above. It has resulted from the fact, apparently, that Mr. Lowden, while he was governor of Illinois a number of years ago and since that time, has built up for himself a record as a friend of agriculture. Thus, the strategy would seem to be that the Republican leadership is turning to a man who can give President Roosevelt a run for his money in the farm belt states.

As far as I know, Mr. Lowden has not been consulted respecting the nomination. It would seem, however, that if he were nominated he would accept despite the fact that he has not sought the nomination in any way nor has he been very active in politics since he sought the nomination for the Presidency in 1920. It was on that occasion, it will be remembered, that he and the late General Leonard Wood fought through into a convention deadlock and Warren G. Harding of Ohio finally was nominated as a compromise candidate.

It is difficult to see how the conservative element in the Republican party could refuse to back Mr. Lowden and it is equally difficult to see how the farm representation and the liberals in the party could withhold their support when the Lowden farm record is considered. But all of this represents subject matter that must await convention action because, after all, there are still other candidates who have blocks of delegates behind them and they may be unwilling to withdraw unless they are satisfied with the dark horse that finally trots out onto the convention platform.

One hears more and more discussion in Washington these days of the tax muddle in which President Roosevelt has found himself. I think it is fair to say that his prestige has suffered considerably from the way his proposed tax increase was handled and I think it is the general consensus that this year's tax bill was a proposition to which the President gave too little thought.

Sometime in the future, the history of the New Deal will be written in a clear and comprehensive manner. The story then will show in retrospect that which we can hardly understand now—the good and the bad in the bewildering adventures attempted under the policies of reform and recovery. I believe those who write that history will dwell upon the 1936 tax legislation as one of the important political weaknesses developed by Mr. Roosevelt.

As far as I know, there has never been a public official who has been entirely consistent at all times in his methods and policies. Mr. Roosevelt, being human, has been inconsistent like all of the rest and there was no reason to expect that he would be the one exception despite the fact that some of his followers maintain that he cannot make mistakes.

But to link the tax legislation with the fact that Mr. Roosevelt is human, let me call attention to the further fact that he has been bold, even daring, in many of his moves. Where his quick decisions have been sound, the country has been benefited. Where he has made mistakes by acting too quickly, his spokesmen have sought to deny that there were errors.

The reason I have called attention to Mr. Roosevelt's mistakes on the tax legislation is chiefly to show something of a new awakening on the part of the general public. The way in which the senate took the tax bill that had passed the house and turned it topsy-turvy, casting out the administration's experimental levy on corporate surpluses, shows better than anything I can say how the voice of public opinion again is being heard in Washington. The "voice of the people," so often referred to by the politicians, was heard quite clear and strong by the senators and the result was a complete reversal of the position which the President desired them to take.

Now, the point is this: If Mr. Roosevelt had done as he has done on numerous occasions, he could have avoided the situation that has reacted unfavorably to him. It will be recalled that several times the President has tried out his theories on various governmental problems and has studied the popular reaction to his trial balloons. He did not do this with the tax bill. He left the job of drafting the legislation to the treasury and the treasury, being populated with a number of men who have no conception whatsoever of business practices and care little for American traditions, produced a piece of legislation that would have forever prevented any business unit from saving funds to carry it through times of depression, the proverbial rainy day.

In the discussions around Washington, it is frequently stated that had Mr. Roosevelt taken his so-called tax experts into a room and made them explain the character of the bill they were presenting, much of the difficulty would have been averted. But he did not use this foresight and the result is now history. He has alienated a considerable amount of congressional support that he ordinarily could have for the mere asking.

As the tax legislation stands, it is nothing more nor less than a makeshift boost in rates. It has added nothing at all to strengthen the nation's general taxation policies. It seems to me that the time is ripe for a general study of the tax structure with the idea in mind that a wholesale revision should take place and that scientific methods should be employed. We must not forget that we have a national debt of more than thirty-one billions and that several other billions in securities are really to be counted in since those obligations are guaranteed by the United States. That debt must be paid eventually and the revenue must be raised in the only way that the federal government can get its money, namely, by taxation. The conclusion, therefore, is inescapable that we face heavy taxation and we may as well face the music.

It may be that all of the twenty-one billions in tax payments and borrowed money which Mr. Roosevelt has expended can be justified in every respect. It may be that in future years the nation will be grateful that this era of extravagance is a part of our history, but the fact still remains that when a government or an individual borrows money, that money must be returned to those who hold the evidence of the debt.

The civil service commission lately has compiled some statistics indicating that the merit system in the federal government is being pushed aside at an alarming rate. The commission's figures show how every President since Arthur in 1883 has expanded the scope of the classified civil service during his administration until the administration of President Roosevelt.

It would be a list much too long to record here how the number of employees of the federal government has increased each year as the government has expanded but as a matter of history it struck me as interesting to see how 41.5 per cent of employees of the federal government under President McKinley held their jobs under the civil service system and laws and how this percentage increased to 61.5 per cent under President Taft; to 72 per cent under President Wilson; to 79.8 per cent under Presidents Harding and Coolidge, and to 80.1 per cent under President Hoover.

By the end of June, 1935, the number of civil service employees in the federal government amounted to only 63.3 per cent of the total number and, while the civil service commission has not tabulated the record for this year, I understand reliably that the ratio will be about 57 per cent of the total.

The total number of employees of the federal government has grown consistently since the turn of the century when it stood at 256,000. In Taft's administration, the total was 370,000. President Wilson's first administration employed 438,000 and then with the advent of the World War the government expanded its personnel to its highest point, 917,000.

As the war agencies were liquidated, the number of employees declined obviously until during the Harding and Coolidge administrations the highest point reached was 540,000. The Hoover administration numbered 583,000 on the pay rolls but the election of President Roosevelt immediately brought on greater numbers and by June 30, 1935, there were 719,000 on the federal pay roll and this number was further increased to 806,000 at the end of March this year.

He made the record, Moscow reports, while repairing the hull of a tugboat which had sunk in the Arctic ocean.

Value of Virtues

THE virtues all lock into each other. They cannot stand alone. Like the stones of an arch, no one of them can be wanting without making all the rest insecure. That character alone is trustworthy in which each virtue takes its relative position, and all are held in place and confirmed by the keystone of a living faith in the great central fact, that there is a God of infinite goodness and truth, whose commandments are the laws of life in this world and in the world to come.—M. C. Ware.

BILLY MINK FINDS SOME QUEER FENCES

When something new and strange you find, Watch out! To danger be not blind.

THE trouble with a great many people is that they are heedless. When they find something new and strange they forget everything but their curiosity. Because of this they walk right straight into trouble. It happens over and over again.

But Billy Mink isn't this kind of a person. My, my, I should say not! He never has been. If he had he would have lost that beautiful brown coat of his long ago, and there would be no

When Billy Came to This Place He Discovered Something Queer.

Billy Mink. Billy has his share of curiosity, but with it he possesses a great big bump of suspicion. When he finds anything new and strange he wants to learn all about it. But right away he is suspicious of it.

After he had discovered the trap set for him at the entrance to one of his favorite holes in the Laughing Brook and had fooled the trapper by getting the fish the trapper had placed in that hole, Billy went on up the Laughing Brook to see what else he could discover. Not very far above that place there was a steep bank on each side of the Laughing Brook. Along the foot of each bank was a narrow strip of level ground between the bank and the water. You see, at this season of the year the water in the Laughing Brook was low.

When Billy came to this place he discovered something queer. It was a little fence. It ran from the foot of the bank straight out into the Laughing Brook to where the water became deep. Midway in this little fence was a gateway just big enough to slip through comfortably. Billy looked across to the other side of the Laughing Brook. Over there was another little fence just like this one, and that little fence had an opening in it.

"Huh!" said Billy. "Huh! Those fences are something new. They were not here when I came down the Laughing Brook yesterday. I wonder what they are for. If it were not for those two little openings I would have to either climb the bank or swim around the ends of those fences, and that would be bothersome. I can go through that little opening there as easy as rolling off a log, but I'm not going to do it. No, sir, I'm not going to do it. There is something wrong about those fences. They look to me as if they had been built just to make me go through one of those little gateways. If that's the case, I'm not going to do it."

So Billy plunged into the Laughing Brook and swam out in the deep water around the end of the little fence. Then very carefully he approached the little opening from that side. The more he looked at it, the less he liked it. Right in the middle of that little opening were some wet dead leaves. "Ha, ha!" said Billy. "Another trap!"

MOTHER'S COOK BOOK

SECRETS OF GOOD FROSTINGS

THE secret of good frostings and fillings for cakes is no secret at all—just use good material, a little care and a good recipe; here are a few:

Boiled Frosting.

Boil together two cups of sugar, two tablespoons of light corn sirup and one-half cup of water until the sirup spins a thread. Pour it very slowly over two stiffly beaten egg whites, flavor with one teaspoon of flavoring and beat until thick enough to spread well. To vary the recipe, add chopped nuts, raisins, figs or dates. Also coconut of various colors may be used to dust the top and sides.

Fudge Frosting.

Cut fine two squares of chocolate and combine with two cups of sugar, one-half cup of milk and one-fourth cup of dark corn sirup. Cook until it forms a very soft ball when dropped into cold water. Remove from the fire, set the pan in cold water and cool, then flavor and beat until thick enough to spread on the cake. For those who prefer maple flavoring use either maple sugar or the maple flavor instead of the chocolate.

Tropical Filling.

Put one-fourth cup of sugar, one teaspoon of cornstarch and one-fourth teaspoonful of salt into a double boiler; when well blended add a half cup of sliced orange peel, one-half cup of butter and one egg yolk; cook until smooth and thick. Remove from the heat, add a teaspoon of lemon juice and spread on the layers of the cake.

THE MYSTERIOUS BALANCE

THE items required for this trick are four match boxes, all of similar make. With them the magician performs what appears to be a feat of jugglery.

Carefully setting the match boxes end on end, he holds them upright between his hands. When he takes his upper hand away his lower hand holds the match boxes balanced. Though he performs several maneuvers with the stack, the match boxes do not fall.

The trick depends upon an unsuspected secret. While arranging the stack the magician pushes down the drawer of the top box. Each drawer in the stack locks with the box below. This makes the balance quite simple. The boxes will not come apart until the magician removes them one by one.

ONCE IN A WHILE

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

ONCE in awhile we just remember April and May, not just December. Once in awhile we quite forget All of the hurt the heart has met. Once in awhile some hour or duty Makes it again a world of beauty. Once in awhile our minds recall Joy, and nothing much else at all.

Once in awhile we cease our fretting; Nothing has changed, we're just forgetting.

Once in awhile if that be true, Isn't it always the thing to do? Once in awhile we're done with sorrow, But if today, why not tomorrow? Why can't we whistle, can't we smile, All of the time, if once in awhile?

Lesson for June 7

JESUS IN GETHSEMANE

LESSON TEXT—Luke 22:39-53.
GOLDEN TEXT—Not my will, but thine, be done.—Luke 22:42.
PRIMARY TOPIC—When Jesus Prayed in the Garden.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus in Gethsemane.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Loyal Christ.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Doing the Father's Will.

Jesus went from the upper room, where the last supper was eaten, to the Garden of Gethsemane. Night had now fallen.

I. Jesus at the Mount of Olives (v. 39).

The garden was a favorite resort of Jesus and his disciples on the slope of the Mount of Olives, a short distance east of Jerusalem (Matt. 26:30). Gethsemane means "oil press," and the garden was a place where the oil was crushed out of olives. There is a striking significance in Jesus' coming to this place. Olive oil was precious, being used both for food and lighting. The bruising and crushing of Christ in this garden has yielded the largest blessings to the world—food for the souls of men, and light for their lives.

II. His Companions (vv. 39, 40).

Peter, James, and John, who had been with him on the Mount of Transfiguration, were permitted to go with him into the deep shadows of the garden (Matt. 26:37). He took those who were best able to apprehend the meaning of the tragic hour, and, too, as a human being he craved sympathy. Knowing the peculiar trial that would be theirs when the Shepherd should be smitten, his purpose was to prepare them for it. It was well that they taste the bitter cup of which he drank, and of which they, too, would later drink.

III. Jesus in Prayer (vv. 41-44).

1. Withdrawal from the disciples (v. 41). Even the members of the inner circle could not go with him through this hour. He went apart from them, for he must be alone with his Father in this darkest hour. Thus alone he kneeled and prayed.

2. What he said (v. 42). "If thou be willing, remove this cup from me." The cup did not primarily mean the physical sufferings of the cross, though they were exceeding great. He did not now desire to escape from the cross and thus to stop short of his redemptive work, for this was the supreme purpose of his coming into the world (Heb. 2:14). Rather it was the revulsion of his holy nature from the burden of sin which he was representatively to bear when the cross was placed upon him. He, indeed, was to be made sin for us who knew no sin (II Cor. 5:21). He was so completely identified with a sinning race that the judgment of a holy God which rightfully would have fallen upon it, was about to strike him.

The cup, therefore, meant his death as the bearer of sin. He came to Gethsemane with a full knowledge of what it meant, and here he bowed in submission to the Father's will. The agony of this hour drew from his brow as it were great drops of blood, but an angel came and strengthened him, and from that place of victory he went with unflinching steps to the cross.

IV. The Sleeping Disciples (vv. 45, 46).

Though they had boasted of their fidelity (Matt. 26:35), they could not watch with him one hour. They were so benumbed by perplexities and sorrow that they slept, and could not watch with Jesus one little hour.

V. Jesus Betrayed (vv. 47, 48).

1. The betrayer (v. 47) was Judas, who had been at the last supper with Jesus; who had journeyed up and down the land with the Lord and his disciples. The fact that he had listened to Jesus' teachings, had witnessed his miracles, had been with him in seasons of prayer (John 18:2), intensified the horror of his deed.

2. The sign of betrayal (v. 47) was a kiss, the age-long token of most tender affection and friendship. The betrayer now degraded that symbol of love by making it the instrument of disloyalty and treason.

3. The words that Jesus spoke (v. 48) to the infamous disciple reveal the infinite tenderness of his heart. But so hardened was the heart of the betrayer that he carried through his brutal contract to deliver the Redeemer of men for thirty pieces of silver. The money was in his purse; he must not weaken. The deed was done.

Shall not those who study this lesson inquire with deep earnestness if anything in their lives may be serving as a practical betrayal of Christ?

Good Deeds

"For every good deed of ours, the world will be better always. And perhaps no day does a man walk down a street cheerfully, and like a child of God, without some passengers being brightened by his face, and unknowingly to himself, catching from its look a something of religion."

Nerves

Do they torture you by day?
Keep you awake at night?

What is it that keeps hospitals open and doctors busy? NERVES.
What is it that makes your face wrinkled and makes you feel old? NERVES.
Nine times out of ten it's NERVES that make you restless, worried, haggard.

Nerves

Do they make you Cranky,
Blue--give you Nervous Indigestion, Nervous Headache?

When nerves are over-taxed, you worry over trifles, find it hard to concentrate, can't sit still. Nerve Strain brings on Headache.
Nervous people often suffer from Indigestion. There may be absolutely nothing wrong with the organs of digestion, but the Nerves are not on the job to make the organs do their work properly.

Nerves

Do they interfere with your work; ruin your pleasure; drive away your friends?

You're cheating yourself and the man who pays you if you work when your NERVES are not normal.
You can't have a good time when you are nervous. You can't make or keep friends when you are keyed up and irritable. You may excuse yourself, but to others you are just a plain crank.

"Blackbeard"

Edward "Blackbeard" Teach, America's most notable native pirate, died in 1718 with his boots on. A British officer, Lieut. Robert Maynard, cut him to ribbons in a duel at Blackbeard's lair in Ocracoke inlet, North Carolina, in order to get a $500 reward posted by the government. Left to mourn Blackbeard were 14 wives, the youngest sixteen, and the British royal governor, Eden, who shared profits of the pirate's expeditions. Teach, like Bonnet, Morgan and other pirates bold, was of an aristocratic family. He had brothers in the British service who were dutybound to shoot him on sight.

FLOWERS FROM YOUR GARDEN

By Melissa Quinn

On a table
At the bedside
Of a sick child
Stood a plant
A colorful foliage plant.

In a ward
Of a large city hospital
On a much-used stand,
Was an arrangement of flowers;
A pink, blue and yellow, sweet scented bouquet.

As a center-piece
On a table set for tiny tots,
In a kindergarten home,
Were oranges arranged with apples,
Tempting, brilliant and beautiful.

A jar of jam
In a mayonnaise container,
With a fancy sticker on the lid,
Was left at the home of an aged couple

Celebrating their seventieth wedding anniversary.

To a crippled lad
Who loves and longs for the out-of-doors,
Was given a small flower pot,
And it contained his heart's desire,
A plant of growing violets.

Quiet smiles
From wan faces;
Gentle caresses
From white and trembling hands;
Loving, lingering glances
From faded and dimmed eyes,
Were given in appreciation and thankfulness
For the gift of flowers.

CHEAP AND CONTEMPTIBLE

The movement launched by under graduates of Princeton Univ. and Vassar College forming associations known as "The Veterans of Future Wars" and "Gold Star Mothers of Veterans of Future Wars" is simply further proof that pacifism, in its worst form, is rampant in our educational institutions. The promoters serve only to stimulate the current demand that teachers and professors be required to take an oath of allegiance to the United States.

The methods adopted by the parlor pink sponsors of this movement cheap, contemptible and in extreme poor taste. With utter disregard for the ordinary principles of decency and in the spirit of "anything for a laugh", these students trample on the grave of Woodrow Wilson, Princeton's most illustrious son and former president and America's wartime commander-in-Chief. Under the guise of collegiate wit and satire the founders of these organizations insult the memory of heroic sons of Princeton who gave their lives during the World War, and previous conflicts, in defense of America's patriotic traditions. They deliberately degrade the sacrifices of the many fine mothers and women that Vassar College has given to the country.

There is nothing new in this latest bit of Campus horseplay-product of the traditional "bull sessions" known to every student. Similar so-called revolts against the existing order of things have been fostered in the past by the same type of students - boys and girls who fail to fit in with routine university activities. As a result, they seek an outlet for their resentment in the pretense of being serious minded saviors of civilization. The hypocrisy of the pose they assume as deep thinkers is exceeded only by their puerile disregard for proprieties and their abysmal ignorance on current subjects.

Both at Princeton and Vassar it is apparent that a group of campus introverts is being misled by the insidious preachings of twisted adult minds on the subjects of war and peace. The unhampered activities of pacifists and internationalists among College students is the most serious aspect of this latest attempt to ridicule not only the man who has worn the uniform of his country in time of war, but the mothers who have died a thousand deaths in mourning the loss of heroic sons.

Gretna Green is a small village in the southern part of Scotland, just across the border from England. Because of its easy marriage laws, it long has been a favorite place with elopers, especially couples from England.

MIDLOTHIAN BOOSTERS WIN

Midlothian Boosters extended their winning streak to four straight over the week-end at the expense of the Franklin Union Printers No. 4 and the Bush Furniture of South Chicago.

HAWLEY-SIMS DUEL
With "Paps" Hawley and Tony Sims pitching in mid-season form, the Midlothian Boosters had a hard time nosing out the Franklin Union Printers 1 to 0, on Memorial Day at Midlothian.

Hawley proved to be the best hurler of the day when he finished the game with a record of giving up 3 hits, 3 bases on balls and 8 strikeouts.

Sims, former twirler for the Duffy Florals, did a great job on the mound for the Printers by allowing 6 hits, 2 walks and 4 strikeouts.

Midlothian scored their lone tally in the 4th inning when Leland walked, went to 2nd on a passed ball and scored on Boudreau's double.

Bush Furniture Easy
Bush Furniture proved to be easy foe for the Midlothian Boosters on Sunday as the Midlothian Club came thru with a 13 to 2 victory.

Dave Smith hurled the full game for the Midlothian crew although showing signs of weakening in the late innings. Smith permitted 5 hits, 9 walks and 8 strikeouts.

Pluta pitched for the Bush Furniture team and did a fair job altho Midlothian pounded out 17 hits off his delivery. Pluta walked one man and whiffed four but his teammates made nine errors behind him which were very costly in the scoring column.

Next Sunday, June 8, Manager Carty and his Midlothian Boosters face a tough assignment when they meet the Chapman Motors from Evanston at 152nd and Crawford avenue at 3 p. m. Chapman's have several former Northwestern University stars in their lineup and have taken four games out of five starts this season. The Evanston team also have a matter of two defeats of last season to settle with Manager Carty so an exciting game is promised all those that attend the game.

Chameleons Lay Eggs

Like turtles and crocodiles, chameleons reproduce by eggs that are laid and hatched in the damp ground. For the most part, they are dainty, smooth-bodied, little creatures that live an arboreal life, and jump from twig to twig in frantic pursuit of bugs, flies and mosquitoes. But certain varieties of the species present striking appearance. Sometimes these are enhanced by warts, prominent spines and serrated crests. Their teeth are often trifid and they are armored with scaly plates that cover their chests, heads and shoulders to protect them from attack by their enemies.

"What is really significant in man's life?" This is a question which is probably as old as life itself. No general answer can be given that will fit all individuals alike. Numerous values are available to man, and each person must seek a balance within his own life. The problem is very real, and cannot be escaped by anyone.

The solution is neither easy nor simple, but as human beings we must seek an answer. In an attempt to help toward a solution, we shall devote our service of worship next Sunday morning to a consideration of this question.

Have you decided to make Tinley Park your home for the next few years? If so, you will want to take upon yourselves the responsibilities of citizenship. Among other things, you will want to be honest enough to have a share in caring for the religious life of the community. For, after all, whether you admit it or not, your residence in this place is made more attractive because there are churches here. There are three congregations within the town itself, and several others nearby. May we urge that you identify your self with the church of your choice in this community. It is not advantageous to maintain a physical residence in one place and a church relation somewhere else.

We find occasionally people who say: "I have lived here for weeks, and no one from the church has called on me." May we suggest that you take the initiative in coming to church, thus giving the members a chance to meet you, and then you may reasonably expect callers. Often we have no means of knowing that new people are in the community, and wish to be called upon.

"God the Only Cause and Creator" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, June 7.

The Golden Text was, "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help. My help cometh from the Lord, which made heaven and earth" (Psalms 121:1,2).

Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "I would seek unto God, and unto God would I commit my cause: Which doeth great things and unsearchable; marvelous things without number" (Job 5:8,9).

The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science Textbook, "Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy: "The Scriptures imply that God is All-in-all. . . . God is individual, incorporeal. He is divine Principle, Love, the universal cause, the only creator, and there is no other self-existence" (p. 331).

SYNTHETIC GENTLEMAN

"Pat—" he began, still standing. "I've stumbled on something."

"So I gathered," she observed. "And I assume that it has to do with your pet murder."

"It has to do with your father."

She smiled.

"I suppose you've discovered that he killed Kelly."

"I've discovered that he called on Kelly that night."

"Wonderful!" Pat mocked. "Who told you that?"

"The taxi-man who drove him down town."

Barry related his adventure with the errant medic.

Pat listened almost indifferently.

"It was sheer chance," Barry concluded. "I hadn't any idea of implicating your father. But now he is implicated. You must see that."

"I don't—unless you insist on dragging him into it."

"I insist on nothing, Pat—except clearing an innocent man."

"At the expense of one equally innocent?"

"What does your father stand to lose by telling the truth? We know now that Kelly was alive when Rogers left the house. I'm just as sure that he was alive when the Judge left. But he must have been killed soon afterward. We've got to find out who killed him."

"Why?"

"Because now we've two men to clear."

"If my father saw Kelly after the boy left—"

"That clears Rogers."

"And puts it up to my father."

"Your father didn't kill Kelly," Barry said. "I know that, and I know why he went to that house."

"Really?"

"He went to protest against filing that Jefferson street decision."

"And then fled it."

"He had to. The pressure was too strong for him. He'd been struggling against it for weeks. In politics, even honest men have to listen to reason sometimes. Your father had to."

"How interesting!"

"In spite of the hullabaloo, he wrote the decision. And, that day, came the bitterest onslaught of all. The Globe made a direct accusation. Your father was frantic. Just before midnight, he telephoned Kelly from the tobaccoist's shop, and went straight to Sixteenth street."

"He told Kelly this verdict would ruin him. Might ruin everybody. For more than an hour, he plead and argued. No use. Kelly was adamant. Your father gave up at two o'clock. Left Kelly alive—and filed his decision next morning, before anyone knew that Kelly was no longer alive. That's the truth, isn't it?"

"So plausible that telling it publicly would probably end my father's career."

"And so?"

"And so I think we'd better forget it."

"You mean that, to continue your father's career, you'd let this boy go to the gallows?"

"Of course, I don't."

She turned to him, the hardness gone out of her voice.

"There's no chance of that, and you know it."

"There's always a chance."

"We'll face that when we come to it."

"We've got to face it now, Pat."

"Why?" she plead. And then, passionately: "What right have you to demand that we do anything? You don't even know this boy."

"I do."

"Since last—"

"And you know him. He's the real John Clarke Ridder."

That gave her pause.

"Whoever he is, he's got a wife and a baby. I can't risk his life to save you, or myself."

"If he's convicted—" Pat began.

"I won't have him go through that. If the Judge doesn't tell the truth now, I will."

Pat's mouth became a straight, hard line.

"And who'll believe you?" she asked.

"I can prove—"

"Who'll take the word of a bribed taxi-driver and a branded adventurer?"

"Listen, Pat—"

"You listen. I've warned you to stop prying into our affairs. You went right on. And now you—the scum of the earth—"

She was losing her head.

"Now you come into my house with a story vilifying my father and threaten to tell it if we don't. My reply to that is: Go ahead! And, an hour after you do, you'll be arrested for robbing the mails!"

They stood facing each other.

"That letter you opened before Willets—the letter with the hundred dollar bill—that wasn't addressed to Barry Gilbert, was it?"

"No."

Pat crossed the room.

"I'm sorry," she said, "but you asked for it."

"I did, but I can't take your answer. I can't because—God help me, Pat—I'm in love with you."

She gave no sign of hearing.

"I'm an adventurer," he went on, "and you're a lady. The realists I ever met. That's why you can't do this."

No answer.

"I couldn't," Barry continued, "and I'm a fake gentleman. I wanted to. I wanted to drop the whole business. I told Willets that after you'd warned me last Friday. And Willets said, 'That isn't done. A gentleman's got certain responsibilities.' He has. That's a tradition stronger than we are."

Pat turned, at last.

"This is funny," she said. You—"

"It is funny," he cut her short. "I'd like to behave like a loafer, and I can't. I'm willing to go to jail to save this boy—and I'm the scum of the earth. You're a lady. How about you?"

"If it were only me—" she broke.

"Your father's a gentleman. How about him?"

Before she could reply, the double doors opened.

Judge Hambridge was standing there—erect and soldier-like.

"Mr. Gilbert's right, Pat," he said. "I release you from your promise to me. I can't go through with it. I'm too tired, and full of self-loathing."

He turned squarely to Barry.

"You're right about everything. About my going to Kelly that night, and the reason I went. He let me in himself. We quarreled violently. So violently that he took a revolver out of his desk drawer and kept it in his hand. Then I walked out of the house. But you were wrong about just one thing, Mr. Gilbert. I left the house at two o'clock, but, when I left it, Kelly wasn't alive."

CHAPTER VII

They were a curiously inert little group for a minute or two after the revelation.

It was like a play, Barry thought; curtain down on a climax, and the actors relaxing until it should rise again for the next scene.

After a time, Barry crossed the room to the pair.

Pat turned on him.

"Well, now you know," she said. "You know about us, but remember we know about you, too."

She was herself again; hard and defiant.

Ignoring her, for the moment, Barry asked the Judge, "Do you want to tell me what happened?"

"I wrote my opinion in the Jefferson street proceedings, and then, again as you say, I couldn't go through with it. I'd never done a crooked thing in my life. I don't know how I ever made that speech at the Astor. The instant it was finished, I telephoned Kelly. 'You'd better come down and talk it over,' he said.

"It's Not a Criminal's Crime, Either," Barry Answered.

"Of course, it would have been fatal for anyone to learn of that meeting. That's why I got out of the taxi at Twenty-third street. As I told you, Kelly admitted me himself. He was drunk, and in a bad temper. 'What's the matter with you?' he asked, when we'd gone into the drawing room. 'White-livered? Here; take a drink, and forget it.'

"There was a bottle on the table, and two glasses. Both of 'em had been used, but he half-filled them, and gave me one. I needed it, but I can't drink Scotch—never could. I told Kelly so, and he blazed out at me. 'You're too good to drink with me—is that it?'

"No," I answered: 'that's not it. But I can't hand down that decision. I simply can't, Mr. Kelly. It's rotten, and everyone knows it. I've got the cursed thing in my pocket, and—'

"And I've got something in my pocket," he shouted—

"Father!" Pat intervened.

"For over an hour, I plead and argued. And Kelly kept drinking, and getting uglier. He was a big man, with a bull neck, and huge hands. At last, he said, 'Shut your damned mouth, and get out of here!'

"I said, 'I'm not going.'

"No?" he sneered, and got up from his chair. He stumbled across the room to a great, old-fashioned desk, and got a revolver. 'Now, beat it,' he yelled, 'and damned quick!'

"All right," I said, 'but I won't file that decision.'

"I walked into the hall, and Kelly stood, leaning against the door, with the pistol in his hand, so furious that I half expected him to shoot before I could get my hat. 'You think you can scare me,' he shouted. 'You and The Globe. You think you got something on me. Witnesses. Squealers.

Well, I know how to take care of them, by God! Beat it! And, if that decision ain't filed by noon today, I'll—'

Again, Pat said, "Father!"

"I know," Hambridge interrupted himself.

Pat's admonition had come just in time, Barry thought. The Judge had risen, tense, and so excited that he seemed on the verge of collapse.

"And that was that," Barry calmed him.

"Not quite," Judge Hambridge continued, but in a lower tone. "When I got to the bottom of the steps—the stone steps, I mean—I stood thinking. If I left that way, there was no telling what Kelly might do. 'I've got to go through,' I thought. 'It's ruin either way, but, if I obey orders, ruin only for me. I'd better give in.' I couldn't make up my mind, though. I kept looking back, half decided. And, suddenly, a queer thing happened. The front door swung open."

The Judge mopped his hands again.

"I'd shut it carefully," he resumed, "but there it was, wide, almost like an invitation. I walked into the hall. The glass doors to the drawing room were closed, but I could see the light through them. When I put my hand on the knob, the lights went out. I turned the knob, and pushed, but the door wouldn't open. Not latched—it was as if someone was holding it."

"Kelly," I thought. 'He won't let me in. I've got to act quick now.' Almost in a daze, I wandered up to the avenue. At nine o'clock, I gave the decision to my clerk, and told him to file it immediately. A few hours later, I learned that Kelly was dead. The papers said his body was found stretched across that door to the hall. I knew then it was there when I left the house, and that was why I couldn't open the door."

Pat said, "Are you satisfied?"

"Are you?" Barry asked. "Or would you rather that I tried to find who killed Kelly?"

"What does it matter—" Pat began, hotly.

"I think Mr. Gilbert's answer that question," the Judge interrupted.

"We've got to clear young Ridder. At any cost, Pat, we've got to clear him."

"Mr. Gilbert's our friend," her father went on. "He says so, and I believe him."

"What do you want to know, Mr. Gilbert?"

"How long did you stand at the foot of the steps before that door swung open?"

"Five minutes. Maybe, a little more."

"Do you think someone opened it? Someone who, then, went in to Kelly?"

"You mean, the murderer?"

Barry nodded.

"No. That's the last thing he would have done. The door probably didn't latch when I closed it."

"While you were in the house, did you see anyone but Kelly?"

"No. We were shut in together."

"Did you hear anyone?"

"Since you mention it, once I did think I heard the front door close. I may have imagined it, but now I remember Kelly asked, 'Who's that in the hall?' It was about half an hour after we went into the drawing room, and I looked out, but there wasn't anyone."

"He—or she—may have gone into the dining room," Barry said. "Whoever killed Kelly came out of the dining room; I'm certain of that."

"Why?"

"Because the drink Kelly offered you was Scotch whiskey. Was there anything else in the room?"

"If there had been, I'd've asked for it."

"Exactly. And the weapon that crushed Kelly's skull was a cutglass decanter containing rye whiskey."

"In the five minutes you were standing on the pavement," Barry reasoned, "someone came out of that dining room, with that decanter, and struck Kelly. There was no time for a quarrel. That man—or that woman—knew what he—or she—was going to do."

"Why do you say 'she'?" Pat asked.

"This wasn't a woman's crime."

"It's not a criminal's crime, either," Barry answered. "A criminal would have brought the weapon, and it wouldn't've been a cut-glass decanter. A criminal might have worn gloves, to prevent leaving finger-prints. But, since this wasn't a criminal, the fact that there were no finger prints suggests that the murderer just happened to be wearing gloves."

"And?" Pat inquired, tensely.

"And men don't often wear gloves on a warm night. Women do. It was a warm night."

"It was very warm," the Judge said.

"You are a shrewd young man," the girl glibly at him. "But your assumptions are ridiculous. Gloves! Anyone might have worn 'em. Anyone might remember the risk of leaving finger-prints, and wipe them off a bottle with a handkerchief. Anyone might've come in through an unlatched door—any time after my father left."

"But," Barry objected, "Kelly was dead then."

"How do you know that? How do we know my father wasn't right when he thought Kelly was keeping him out? All your conjectures lead nowhere, Mr. Gilbert. The only discovery you've made is that father saw Kelly after young Ridder did. And, as I told you, that's merely implicating one innocent man instead of another."

"And you—"

"Naturally, it's the second innocent man I care about. Especially since his innocence—of murder—wouldn't keep your disclosures from disgracing him."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

VICE VERSA

By CARLTON JAMES

© Associated Newspapers.—WNU Service.

"SOMETIMES," said retired Police Inspector Andrews, "it seems that the more a man tries to evade capture for a crime he has committed, the more likely becomes his apprehension. And vice versa."

"Vice versa?" I said in some astonishment.

"What do you mean by that?"

Andrews smiled faintly and nodded.

"Yes," he said, "vice versa. Take, for example, the case of Vic Bradley. Vic was a murderer. Not chronic, mind you. He killed to pay a debt. Vengeance."

"His victim's name was Ross. Burt Ross. When they were young men, Ross had stolen Bradley's girl. He persuaded her to elope with him on the eve of her marriage to Vic. Made all sorts of promises, spoke slanderously of his rival, produced a note, written in Bradley's hand, in which he admitted that he was marrying Helen, his betrothed, only for her money."

"Vic never got over it. He learned later from Helen's own lips of Ross's trickery, learned that Ross had forged the note himself. Helen died in Vic's arms. Ross had killed her."

"Bradley never forgot and never recovered from the wrong done him by Ross. He swore to kill the other man, and dedicated his life to this purpose. But its accomplishment was more difficult than he had anticipated. Ross vanished. But Vic knew that no man in this day and age can completely disappear."

"And so Bradley began his search. A distant uncle had died and willed him a modest fortune, so besides being able to devote his entire time to the accomplishment of his purpose he was also enabled to employ various agencies to assist him."

"The search lasted for ten years. And during this time Vic's desire for

"Vic Called at Ross's Room and Shot Him Dead as Casually as You Please."

vengeance did not diminish in the least. In fact, due to constant brooding and lack of other matters to occupy his mind, the thing became an obsession, haunting him day and night.

"Eventually he found Ross in a New York hotel, living under an assumed name. As soon as he had positively identified his enemy, Vic loaded up the automatic he had purchased for the purpose, called at Ross's room and shot him dead, without preamble and as casually as you please."

"Assured that Ross was dead, he pocketed his automatic, strolled out of the hotel and returned to his apartment. He then sat down to wait. Momentarily he expected the arrival of the police. He had not planned to attempt avoiding the consequences of his act, realizing the futility of it. When the police arrived he would confess to the crime and gladly go with them. He had expected to pay for his revenge with his own life, and felt that his bargain was not unfair."

"Bradley sat in his chair for two hours. But the police didn't come. This fact mildly surprised but did not puzzle him. He knew it would be merely a matter of a few more minutes."

"Presently he became conscious of hunger, and left his apartment and walked to a nearby restaurant. He made no attempt to be secretive or overly indifferent. He regarded no one furtively, indeed was not concerned with how people regarded him. He just didn't care. He could see no point in voluntarily surrendering himself to the authorities, neither would he go out of his way to evade capture."

"Returning to his apartment, he half expected to find a squad of uniformed officers awaiting his arrival, but the place was as he had left it—deserted. He sat up for three hours, waiting. But nothing happened, and he went to bed."

"The next morning at breakfast he read about the murder and smiled in faint contempt upon discovering that the authorities had no clue regarding the identity of the slayer."

"Throughout the day, Bradley lounged around his apartment. At night he attended a movie. The next day, for the first time aware of his inactivity, he took a walk in the park. That night he visited his club, played bridge with three other members. The next day he attended an art exhibit, dined with friends and returned to his apartment quite late."

"It was while he was disrobing that suddenly the desire came to him to live. That is, for the first time in ten years, Bradley awoke to the fact that he was still a young man, that life stretched out ahead of him. He had satisfied his desire for vengeance, achieved his goal. Why not now dismiss the incident from his mind, call it a closed book and begin all over again."

"The idea grew upon him. The more he thought about it, the more pronounced became the longing to follow this course of action. Yes, that was the thing to do. It was the thing he would do.

"Instantly, now that the decision was made, he thought of Ross, of the crime he had committed. There was little danger of capture. He knew that from his experience of the past few days. Still, he must be more careful. He'd been altogether too indifferent and careless. It was a wonder he hadn't been picked up long ago."

"Bradley crossed to his closet, took down the suit he had been wearing on the day he shot Ross, and removed from its pocket the automatic. It would never do, he told himself, to have the weapon found on his person. He considered several hiding places, and eventually tucked it far back in a drawer of his desk."

"He reviewed his crime and tried to think of other precautions to cover up his guilt. None presented themselves and he became a little alarmed. Capture now held for him a peculiar horror. He shuddered, thinking of the electric chair."

"The next day he visited his club again—and that evening he was arrested and charged with the murder of Ross."

Andrews paused. The faint smile was still on his lips.

"What?" I said. "How did they find out he was the man?"

"By vice versa," said Andrews.

"Don't you get it? As long as Vic didn't care whether he was captured or not, he could act perfectly normal. But the minute he tried to act normal, he failed. The reason he went to the club that next day was because he felt that if he didn't, the members might become suspicious of his absence. One of them noticed his change in attitude. Another, quite innocently asked him where he was on the night of the murder. A third became suspicious at Vic's answer. They talked it over, they questioned him further, and the guilt in Bradley's eyes was too obvious to be ignored."

"A member with whom he had never got along very well took it upon himself to call the police. Officers searched his apartment. They found the gun. He was charged with the murder and confessed." Andrews paused and shrugged. "You see," he said, "vice versa."

Bible Society Counts 972

Languages for Scriptures

The number of languages in which the Bible or some part of it has been published now totals 972, according to an announcement by the American Bible society.

Among the recent publications of the society is the revised Ponape New Testament and Psalms which will be used in Ponape, the largest of the Caroline Islands. Five nationalities are participating in this project; translated by Germans, printed in England, financed by Americans, distributed by Japanese, and used by Ponapians.

Other scriptures recently published include the Gospels of St. Matthew and St. John in Rundl, one of the many dialects of the Bantu language family. This volume, published by the British and Foreign Bible society, will be used in Danish Baptist mission work in the Belgian Congo. The New Testament in Meninka and the First Epistle of St. John in Kissi recently were published on the mission press in West Africa of the Christian and Missionary alliance.

An analysis of the American Bible society's records shows that of the grand total of 972 languages in which scripture publication has occurred the complete Bible has now been published in 175 languages; the New Testament in 208 additional languages; portions of the Bible, or one complete book, in 514 more, and selections from the Bible, that is, less than a complete book, in still 75 more languages.

Drive Against Trachoma

Prior to the war the existence of trachoma in Rumania was almost general, but in the process of training young men for the military service there was a successful onslaught upon the ravages of the eye disease. Recruits found to be infected were sent to a hospital, where they remained as long as their condition was regarded as infectious. A history of each case was prepared and a government physician was sent into the locality of the victim's residence and examinations made. If any great number of cases were discovered, means were taken at once to stamp out the disease. This resulted in a great diminution of the cases. During the times, the invasion of troops, the immigration of Russians, the annexation of Bessarabia, the return of war prisoners and the return of imperfectly healed soldiers from the field added much to the spread of trachoma. Doctor Cerkez, who has been designated by the government to investigate the conditions, urges the legislative carrying out of early diagnosis, regular eye examination of school children and workmen, the erection of special trachoma hospitals and dispensaries, migratory dispensaries for the village folk compulsory notification and treatment, eye examination of all immigrants and, finally, the organization of propaganda work.

Odd German Elevator

Among the oddest passenger elevators in use today is a set installed in a large office building in Hamburg, Germany, according to Collier's. They are built like buckets on an endless chain, going up one side of the shaft and coming down the other without a stop. There are no doors and the passengers hop on and off as the cars pass their floor. Those whose "timing" is bad have to use the stairs.

Sumotari, Not Ju-Jitsu, Real Japanese Wrestling

Ju-jitsu is not, as most people imagine, Japanese wrestling. It is merely their art of self-defense. Japanese wrestling is sumotari, a form of athletics in which every ounce of weight counts. It is the national sport, and very popular indeed; Sumo stars receive fees in excess of those commanded by successful baseball players. They are immensely powerful, but also very fat, and look like huge balls of blubber.

Pat Scanlan's Triple Play

THE grandfather of James E. McGrath of Evanston, Ill., was T. D. Scanlan, one of the pioneers who laid the first transatlantic cable out of Hearts Content, Newfoundland. He was also the father of Jim's uncle, Patrick Scanlan.

Pat Scanlan, and now we're getting down to cases, was one of the most powerful swimmers and fishermen Canada or New England has seen. Often he plunged into lakes and swam them with a surveyor's chain in his mouth. And while doing this, Pat always had time to select the likeliest fishing pools.

His finest fishing is family history, handed down to Jim McGrath. It happened in upper New York state and Jim is positive it's true because Pat yelled so loudly it shook the McGrath house, down in Brooklyn.

You see, Pat was fishing in this lake he had seen while nibbling a surveying chain. It was near dusk and he was casting three hooks near the shore for fish he sometimes in shallow water when it's getting dark.

Pat cast and hooked a trout. He played the fish a short time, then gave a determined jerk to establish who was boss. As Pat jerked he snared a muskrat on the second hook. That was too much so he whooped and threw the double catch high in air, casting trout, muskrat and line back toward the water with a mighty "swoosh."

And when Pat heaved the line toward the water he caught a hummingbird on the third hook. He always claimed it was the only unassisted triple play of that particular season.

The End of the Philly-Loo

IT is a well-known fact that the Philly-loo bird is extinct but accounts of the death of the last survivor vary. Larry Flint, a Pennsylvania newspaper man says he saw the tragedy while visiting in Wyoming.

"The Philly-loo was ferociously fond of the holes in doughnuts. His method of eating them was unique; he backed up to them, slipped his tail through them, then flicked the appendage around in front and fed himself.

"An old-timer out there, knowing of this peculiarity, sought out the last surviving Philly-loo and laid several doughnut holes down in front of the bird. In order to eat the hole, the Philly-loo had to move his tail around into the proper juxtaposition. This brought about his end."

But F. F. Fuller of the Rhame (N. D.) Review has another version of the story. He says that he and another editor had the job of hunting down the last survivors of the race to serve at a banquet for some visiting newspaper men. Near a mountain in the Bad Lands they flushed a covey of the birds and started chasing them.

"The Philly-loos began circling the mountains," relates Mr. Fuller. "As they did so each bird grabbed the tail of the bird ahead and as they mounted upward and the circle narrowed, they swallowed to take up the slack. They kept circling and swallowing until each bird had completely swallowed the bird ahead, and they entirely disappeared from before our eyes. All that is left are a few tracks circling the mountain that look just like those made by an automobile driven by a one-armed driver. I've never seen a Philly-loo bird since that time."

Winner by a Nose

LOTS of fellows who work in a metropolis were born in the great open spaces, and invariably they retain their hankering for the hinterlands.

Lewis W. Hunt, city editor of the Chicago Daily News, is no exception. And sometimes when the boys are having a chinning match he is unable to conceal his liking for the bad lands of Montana from whence he came.

So when a party from Kansas asserted that in his country it became so dry it was necessary to run water from the well through a wringer, and to throw gravel on the barn to delude the cows into thinking rain was falling, so they'd come out, Luke asserted himself.

"It's cold we relish in Montana," declared Hunt. "One winter in my home town the mercury sank so low that boiling hot coffee froze in a solid stream en route from pot to cup.

"And that was the year," he concluded, "that the man in our town with the longest nose froze his proboscis. A friend recommended the only possible relief would be to rub snow on it. The long-nosed man rubbed snow on the part of his nose he could reach and threw snowballs at the rest. In nine days he was entirely recovered."

Insane Monarchs

Europe had more insane monarchs in power during the last half of the Eighteenth century than in any other similar period in its history. During this time nine of them mounted the thrones of seven countries. An interesting one was Abdul Hamid I, who reigned over Turkey from 1773 to 1789, writes Alan B. Cox, New York city, in Collier's Weekly. Before he was made sultan, Abdul had been locked in a cage for 43 years.

There are all kinds of ways to make you think you're saving money. In refrigeration there's only one way that counts. That's actual operating proof. A day isn't enough. Nor ten days. Nor a year.
